

'Y' students borrow less

by SHERIDAN R. HANSEN
Senior Reporter

Although a recent congressional report shows that nationally more students are borrowing college money through federal programs, the opposite is the case at BYU.

"Actually our loan traffic has decreased somewhat in the past five years, primarily because of the new requirements in applying for a loan," said Ford L. Stevenson, BYU director of Financial Aid, Grants and Loans.

Before 1982, there were very few eligibility restrictions on loans. But new regulations were adopted both by the federal government and the university, making loans harder to get, he said.

Guaranteed Student Loan applicants are required to complete a need analysis form by the federal government. The university requires applicants to submit their most recent income tax forms as well as their parents' forms if they are dependents.

"We used to process about 10,000 loans a year," he said. Since 1984, approximately 6,000 students take out loans each year."

When the legislature passed the authorization Act of 1986, which requires a need analysis form as part of the Guaranteed Student Loan application, the loan became a need-based program.

"Every family is expected to make some type of contribution to their children's education," said Stevenson. "The need analysis form helps us know what it should be."

He said the new law has higher loan limits for borrowers, pointing out that juniors or seniors can borrow up to $4,000 if they are eligible.

"Tuition has increased, but more financial aid is available now compared to 10 years ago," he said. The Guaranteed Student Loan program makes it easier for the middle class to get a college education.

Debt Weight

Four year private college students owe an average of $8,950 in loans by graduation.

Since 1984 the approximate number of loans processed at BYU has dropped from 10,000 to 6,000.

New eligibility restrictions were added to loan applications by the Reauthorization Act of 1986 making loans a need based program.

Juniors and seniors may now borrow as much as $4,000 if eligible.

Last year federal programs accounted for $9.8 billion in loans and $5 billion in grants.

"We have crossed a real milestone in financial assistance," Stevenson said. "It was possible to work and pay for your total education when I went to BYU 20 years ago, but now it is almost impossible unless you go to work in Alaska and live in a tent for the summer."

"Students now need some type of assistance whether it be from their family or some other type of financial source."

According to the congressional report released by the Joint Economic Committee, federal loans to students have almost tripled in the last 10 years, while grants that do not have to be repaid have declined.

Students in private four-year colleges who borrowed for their education last year accumulated an average debt of $8,950 at graduation, the report said. The figure for students in public institutions was $6,685.

Because BYU does not have a loan database, Stevenson said he did not know what the average debt was for a BYU student at graduation.

He did say, however, that approximately 6,000 students leave the university in debt every year.

"That is not bad when you think that it isn't even one-third of the student body," he said.

Currently 5,500 BYU students (22 percent) are financially assisted by grants and 6,000 students (23 percent) are assisted by loans, Stevenson said. Approximately 27 percent have either a Pell Grant, Guaranteed Student Loan or both.

The congressional report showed that total borrowing under federal programs amounted to $9.8 billion in the last school year. Federal grants and scholarships dropped from $13 billion to $5 billion, a decline of 62 percent.

However, at BYU, Pell Grant participation has been the same for about four years, Stevenson said.

Future plans, such as the decision to purchase a home or new car, will most likely be altered for students who find themselves in debt, but Stevenson said there is another side to the coin.

He said although some students have to go in debt to finish college, it is important to look at what position they would be in without a college degree.

"The debt is not as significant when you see what you will earn over a lifetime with a college degree," Stevenson said.

"This doesn't mean we are not concerned. In fact, we are starting a new program that will let students know how much they will be paying when they graduate. We want them to make a good decision when they decide to take out a loan. We want them to know the impact it will have."

Those students who continue their education after a bachelor's degree also face a great burden in financing their education.

Stevenson noted, however, that the loan delinquency rate for graduate school at BYU and the J. Reuben Clark Law School is very small indicating that finances are available after graduation.

Soldiers kill Philippine peasants

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Marines today fired into a crowd of 1,000 peasants demanding land reform when club-wielding farmers tried to storm the presidential palace. Hospitals reported at least 12 people were killed and 94 were injured.

It was the first time since President Corason Aquino took office 11 months ago that her security forces have shot demonstrators. There was no official word on casualties.

The clash occurred on Mendiola ridge about 300 yards from Malacanang Palace.

During the 20-year authoritarian rule of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, the area was the scene of related bloody confrontations between security forces and opposition demonstrators.

Aquino came to power last February after big street demonstrations and a military-civilian revolt forced Marcos to flee to Hawaii.

Government and Communist rebel negotiators later announced they were suspending peace talks because death threats against representatives of both sides by unidentified forces seeking to destabilize the Aquino administration.

The chief rebel negotiator said today's shootings would make resumption of the talks difficult.

The marines, who have been guarding the palace since coup rumors circulated last weekend, turned their guns on a crowd of about 10,000 people organized by the leftist movement of Philippine Farmers.

Security forces said they were provoked when demonstrators threw rocks and tried to break through a phalanx of about 500 troops and riot police.

Some of the militants carried iron bars and wooden clubs with three-inch nails as they marched to the palace from a rallying point in front of the main downtown post office.

Aquino summoned key civilian and military advisers, including Defense Minister Rafael Iloilo, to an emergency meeting after the clash. Her spokesman, Teodoro Benigno, said the president "expressed deep regret" over the confrontation and ordered an investigation.

The leftists, some of whom Wednesday barricaded entrances to the Ministry of Agrarian Reform, had vowed to march on Malacanang, regardless of security measures, to demand the immediate distribution of land.

The marchers scattered in terror when the troops opened fire. Security forces also fired tear gas, and two jeeps loaded of troops chased after the fleeing demonstrators.

Hours later, crowds of angry protesters milled about in a nearby square in front of the main post office.

Scores of troops armed with M-16 rifles stood guard near the palace after the incident, and barricaded major streets leading to Aquino's residence, located a short distance from Malacanang.

Leaks to media delay Hofmann hearing

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A judge Thursday abruptly canceled a hearing for documents dealer Mark Hofmann after details of a possible plea-bargain agreement were leaked to the news media.

Third District Judge Kenneth Rigrup refused to say why the hearing was called off, but his clerk said the judge "wasn't too happy" with newspaper and television reports that a plea bargain was imminent.

An angry Rigrup told reporters who camped outside his courtroom Thursday that a hearing had never been scheduled. However, Salt Lake County Attorney David Yocum said, "I was told there was a hearing scheduled today and it was canceled."

Rosemary Gacnik, a spokeswoman for the state court administrator's office, said she spoke with Rigrup Thursday afternoon and was told there was no hearing scheduled and no plea-bargain agreement.

"Judge Rigrup says there is no substance to speculation that Mr. Hofmann was going to enter into a plea-bargain agreement today or be sent to prison," Gacnik said.

Hofmann, 32, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder in the 1985 bombing deaths of Steven Christensen and Kathleen Sheets. He also faces 28 counts of fraud, theft by deception and bomb making.

Prosecutors contend Hofmann turned to murder in an attempt to cover up a scheme in which allegedly fraudulent historical documents were sold to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and other collectors for hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Treasurer kills self at press conference

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Pennsylvania's treasurer, facing jail for defrauding the state, proclaimed his innocence at a news conference Thursday but said "It's too late for me," then pulled a pistol from a manila envelope, put it into his mouth and killed himself.

R. Budd Dwyer died instantly after he fired a single shot from a .357 Magnum pistol in front of two dozen horrified reporters, photographers and aides, said Dauphin County Coroner William Bush.

"No, No! Budd, don't do this!" screamed several people gathered in Dwyer's office suite in the state Finance Building just before he pulled the trigger.

Moments after the shot rang out, someone cried, "Dear God in heaven." Dwyer's son Rob, 21, said his father had given the family no indication of what he intended to do. "We're pretty broken up," he said, his voice cracking during a telephone interview. He said he heard the news at home with his mother, Joanne, 47, and sister, Dyan, 18.

On Wednesday, the attorney general's office had declared that Dwyer, 47, would be out of office as soon as he was sentenced Friday in federal court in Williamsport. Before that, Dwyer, a Republican who had been elected to his second term in 1984, had planned to stay in office on a leave of absence without pay until his appeal was resolved.

Chinese govt. fires academy leaders

PEKING (AP) — The government today fired the president and vice president of China's prestigious Academy of Sciences in a move that appeared part of the leadership's new crackdown on Western liberal ideas.

The official Xinhua News Agency said the academy president, Lu Jiaxi, and vice president, Yan Dongsheng, were dismissed at a meeting of the National People's Congress Standing Committee that ended today. It did not say why they were fired.

The academy represents about 100 institutes with more than 30,000 scientists. Some members have spoken out in the past year for greater intellectual freedom, making the academy a target for the current campaign against "bourgeois liberalism," a catchphrase for attitudes critical of the Communist Party or socialism.

Snowstorm causes accidents, deaths

By The Associated Press
A major winter storm roared into the Northeast on Thursday after dumping up to 15 inches of snow on the South, shutting down airports, schools and highways from Mississippi to New England.

At least three deaths were attributed to the storm, and officials up and down the Atlantic Coast urged motorists to stay home.

"It's just like a war zone out there," said Art Strong of the National Weather Service in Charleston, W. Va. "The first good storm of the season causes all kinds of problems."

The storm, born in the Gulf of Mexico and packed with moisture, began blanketing the southern states with snow Wednesday night. Scores of accidents were reported, along with one traffic death, as Southerners struggled to cope with the downfall.

Thiokol to receive rocket repair money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Morton Thiokol, Inc., the company that built the booster rocket blamed for the destruction of space shuttle Challenger, will receive at least $350 million for correcting the rocket's flaws, Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn. said Thursday.

"I'm concerned they are going to end up making a great deal of money out of this entire thing," Gore said at a Senate space subcommittee hearing about the progress being made on fixing the rockets.

The president of Morton Thiokol Aerospace Group, E.U. Garrison, and other company officials were witnesses, but they did not respond.

"The way I see it, the company made some mistakes in building this booster," Gore told a witness, J.R. Thompson, the new director of the Marshall Space Flight Center.

USW officials approve new contract proposal

OREM, Utah (AP) — Local United Steel Workers of America (USW) officials say USX Corp.'s contract proposal to end a near 6-month-old work stoppage is not all they had hoped for, but it is acceptable given the circumstances.

On Wednesday, hundreds of workers from USX Corp.'s Geneva Plant and their spouses crowded into Mountain View High School to hear details of the tentative settlement.

Some 1,900 Utah steelworkers have been idled by the work stoppage, which union officials insist is a lockout and USX calls a strike. In all, 22,000 steelworkers at USX plants nationwide are involved.

Workers will vote on the contract settlement by sending ballots directly to USW headquarters in Pittsburgh. The results are to be announced Jan. 31.

The agreement was overwhelmingly approved by local union presidents and is still expected to be ratified by the union's rank-and-file members.

If they ratify the agreement, workers will give up about $1.12 per hour in direct wages and a total of about $2.45 per hour in wages and benefits.

They will also give up a week of vacation, four paid holidays and all pay raises and cost-of-living increases over the life of the four-year contract.

Progress breeds ethical issues

By JANET L. FISHER
Universe Staff Writer

A couple unable to have children may resort to the use of a miniaturized uterus which is implanted in the husband. With the aid of hormone treatments, he would be able to nurse the child.

This is just one of the new forms of technology that students will be ethically facing, said a BYU professor during a Biology 100 seminar.

A. Lester Allen, chairman of the zoology department and dean of the Biology and Agricultural College, spoke Thursday on the decisions we are going to be faced with in the near future concerning technological advances. "As with the male birthing," Allen said, "technically it can be done. It is feasible."

Allen discussed an experiment conducted in which an embryo without an artificial uterus was placed on the surface of a male chimpanzee's kidney. The baby was born with no complications.

Allen dealt with 18 cases that involved ethical issues in human reproduction. His purpose for discussing these was to "encourage and strengthen our bio-ethical problem solving ability."

Another case he studied dealt with hybridization. In the Republic of China a chimpanzee was artificially inseminated with human sperm. The implantation was effective and the chimpanzee became pregnant. The community the experiment was being conducted in became very upset, raided the lab and destroyed all the work being done.

According to Allen, hybridization experiments "usually don't work but like in this case sometimes they do."

In ethically dealing with such cases, Allen said that traditional moral values held are not abandoned but they just don't apply.

A Mormon rape victim who becomes pregnant has many options.

One of these is abortion. The standard Mormon value system is based on members never having to even consider abortion, yet the LDS church approves of one in a case of this sort.

Allen uses this example to stress his point that our values will be tried in ways as never before.

The seminar involved the students listening to the lecture. They filled out a sheet that listed all 18 cases that Allen has dealt with. He presented each case and asked the students to write down their degree of support towards the form of the new technology presented.

There were over 61 students present and their views ranged from liberal to conservative on most the cases discussed.

BYU senior draws esteemed Ford offer

By MARILEE SCHOLL
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU senior was offered a job signing show cars for the Ford Motor Company while in Detroit last week — a position that apparently is not easy to come by.

"Ford only hired one new car designer in the United States last year," said Mark McChesney, an industrial design major with an emphasis on transportation. "I was at the right place at the right time."

Although he knew he was being considered for the job in December, McChesney didn't receive the offer until last week when he flew to Detroit to tour studios.

The senior said he will be on an international program which will allow him to travel the world to work in different Ford studios.

"I could end up in London, Germany, Australia, South Africa, or Brazil," he said. "This is what I want to do all my life."

McChesney calls his work an "adolescent obsession."

"I drew cars all through school and found out I could make money at it," he added he worked for four months last year as an intern drawing the exterior of show cars for a motor company.

McChesney said his major — industrial design with an emphasis on transportation — is rather obscure, but there is still heavy competition.

"We do thousands of sketches and are responsible for how they look."

Neither is the discipline an easy one.

"You need to be creative, you need to draw your brains out, you must know how to communicate visually and can't expect a lot of social life."

McChesney was on a scholarship with Chrysler last fall and was an aide for a transportation design class.

Most rely on TV for news

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Too many people rely only on television for their daily news and "by not utilizing the print media, they fail to keep themselves adequately informed," said Deseret News Publisher William J. Mortimer.

Mortimer told the annual meeting of the Cache Chamber of Commerce Wednesday that about 65 percent of Americans get 100 percent of their news from television.

All the words spoken in a 30-minute newscast do not equal the number of words on the front page of a daily newspaper, he said.

"It's fine to enjoy the visual impact you get from television, but I would encourage you to pick a subject, treat it in 30 or 45 seconds on television and then follow up that subject through a newspaper," he said.

Artworks represent faculty enthusiasm

Franz Johansen displays "Exceleth" in the BYU faculty art exhibit. Each faculty member creates between 40-to-50 pieces a year, displaying them at various art shows.

By MINDY DOVER
Universe Staff Writer

Art works exhibiting advances in BYU's faculty art techniques are currently on display in the B.F. Larsen Gallery, HFAC.

"The art work in this show represents the enthusiasm and vigor the faculty have for making art," said Sherron B. Hill, chairman of the BYU Art Department.

Faculty members displaying their work are: Frank Magleby, Brent Gehring, Wayne Kimball, James C. Christensen, Bruce H. Smith, Franz Johansen, Peter L. Myer, Robert L. Marshall, Joseph Bennion, Jenni Christensen, Von Allen, Fred Takaski, Royden Card, and Wulf Barsch.

"It's interesting to walk through the gallery between classes," said Jessica Draper, a history major from Lindon, Utah. "It is incredible how varied and fun the pieces are. The exhibit really contributes to the University."

"Artists never stop creating," said Clyff Allen, director of art galleries at BYU. "They have a sensational desire to create. Each piece leads to a set of new images."

"I want each painting to be delicious and inviting, a confirmation of multiple layers of reality, a seduction between illusion and reality," said Marshall.

"The most significant aspect of this exhibit is that it shows the faculty searching, pushing, and developing," said Allen. "They challenge themselves by trying to solve problems. Masterpieces are created by working out problems."

Gehring said his intent with this work is "to venture out into the unknown, to make a little gesture of discovery, if I can."

Being a member of the studio art faculty is like holding two jobs, explains Allen. "You have to be an artist and a teacher."

Each faculty member is creating between 40-to-50 pieces a year, said Allen. "Most have held their own shows sometime within the past year. Shows build the reputation of an artist," he said. B.F. Larsen Gallery is located in the open court area of the Harris Fine Art Center. The art exhibit will be on display throughout Feb. 17.

BYU vocalists ready to launch opera career

By LEANN L. FREDRICKSON
Universe Staff Writer

Two BYU vocal artists have been chosen to represent Utah as state semi-finalists in a nationwide competition sponsored by the Metropolitan Opera of New York.

The competition is being held in an effort to find talented vocal artists who wish to launch a career in the opera world.

Anna Mooy, a graduate student from Sunnyvale, Calif., studying music education, and Nina Warren, a senior from Palos Verdes, Calif., majoring in linguistics, will compete Friday at the University of Utah, for the opportunity to be one of three finalists who will perform in the regional competition in Denver Colo. The final competition will be held in New York.

At the national finals, some of the vocal artists will have the opportunity to perform in a special concert and "sing for a lot of influential people," said Mooy. Warren also said being chosen to sing at this concert could net the participant up to $4,000.

Although the "Met" competition offers good exposure, Mooy, a third-time state finalist, said contracts to sing with the opera company are rarely offered to participants. Instead, offers for summer internships are more of a possibility.

Mooy believes the key to success in the opera world is "finding as many opportunities to audition as you can, singing for as many people as you can, and getting as many opinions as you can."

She said working with a big name like Giorgio Tozzi, who made his Metropolitan Opera debut in 1955, provides a "wealth of experience" to students. Both Mooy and Warren studied voice with Tozzi during his stay as a visiting professor at BYU.

He is a top casting agent for many opera companies. He arranged an audition for Warren this summer with La Scala, an opera company in Milan, Italy.

Warren's main goal is to sing in all the major opera houses. She is very positive about her future success in the opera world.

"I know I'm going to have a singing career. You have to keep saying it even on the days you really don't believe it. You have to be positive."

Warren said opera is the highest form of art and requires a complete commitment to a particular life style.

"I have to make sure I eat the right foods and get eight hours of sleep every night."

After graduation in December, Mooy plans to move to the West Coast and pursue her career more seriously. This includes setting up a private studio and teaching voice, along with auditioning extensively with various opera companies.

Although the opera competition is a possibility of good things to come, Mooy said she believes in keeping a good perspective about the outcome. "My main goal is to capture the essence of the character in the aria and do my best in the competition."

Mooy is the assistant director of University Singers, and she gives both private and group vocal lessons. She has also performed with Opera West.

Warren has performed in both opera and theatrical productions on campus. She placed third in the San Francisco Opera National Competition.

Mister Rogers clone sought for KBYU look-alike contest

By MELODY ZINGMARK
Universe Staff Writer

Students who have a gleaming smile, a pair of white tennis shoes and can sing "It's A Beautiful Day in the Neighborhood," may end up being the new Mr. Rogers.

A Mr. Rogers Look-Alike contest and dance, sponsored by KBYU, as a fund raiser for them, will take place Monday at the Palace, co-sponsors of the event.

Mr. Rogers was chosen because he is a popular figure among college students.

Cindy Williams, membership director of KBYU, talked to Sam Newbury, who plays the character Mr.

McFeely on the Mr. Rogers show.

"It is amazing the interest college students have in the program, we have quite a fan club," he said.

A portion of the money raised will go to the Kids Club Program.

It is one of the top television shows on KBYU and viewed by children all over Utah.

The grand prize winner of the Look-Alike contest will receive a private party at the Palace, dinner for two at two local restaurants, 10 free videos and a machine and free ski passes.

The dance will begin at 8:30 p.m. at the Palace with door prizes every 25 minutes. The cost is $2.50 per person and $2 each for groups of 10 or more.

Bullock awards feature best voices

By LEANN L. FREDRICKSON
Universe Staff Writer

The fourth annual Bullock Vocal Awards will feature performances by the 20 best vocal students at BYU.

The awards are scheduled to take place on Saturday, at the Madsen Recital Hall, HFAC.

Semi-finalists will perform at 4 p.m., followed by a 7:30 p.m. performance presented by the ten finalists.

"You'll see our 20 best singers at their best," said Clayne Robison, coordinator of the awards.

Participants are chosen by a faculty panel and are required to perform two contrasting numbers. The panel is looking for students who possess superior vocal quality, and performance artistry.

We want to see "young professional qualities" that would make these students an asset to an opera company, said Robison.

Those students who, "can put the whole performance package together," according to Robison, will receive the award of two semesters full tuition.

Although not all participants will receive tuition awards, almost all of the students in the top 20 will receive some type of performance award which could help pay for vocal lessons, said Robison.

Cougars dunk Falcons

BYU forward Greg Humphreys tries to dribble downcourt after stealing the ball from Jeff Bowling of Air Force.

By DAVID BUXTON
Sports Editor

The final basket of BYU's 87-69 victory over Air Force summed up the whole game.

With 13 seconds left in the game, the Cougars held an 85-69 lead over the Falcons, and most of BYU's starters were enjoying the last minutes from the bench. Freshman David Reeves knocked the ball away from an Air Force guard and raced down court for a fast break layup.

But Reeves was bumped as he went up for his shot and the ball bounced above the rim.

Before Air Force could say "welcome to major college basketball," another freshman, 6-2 guard Marty Haws, came flying through the air and slammed home an in-your-face dunk, sending the Marriott Center crowd to its feet in wild approval as the clock ran out.

"I've never done that before in college basketball," said Haws, who is usually one of the shortest men on the court. "Lately I've been looking for an opportunity to dunk the ball," he said. Haws long jumped 23 feet on his high school track team.

Overall the Cougars showed that their sluggish performances in the last three games may have been just a passing phase, totally dominating Air Force on the boards and defensively manhandling the Falcons.

Head Coach Ladell Andersen said BYU has not played that well defensively since they beat 14th-ranked Pittsburgh by 20 points in December.

The game started out slow, with BYU and Air Force playing evenly for about the first five minutes as the lead changed hands four times. BYU guard Bobby Capener's three-pointer at 15:37 in the first half put BYU on top 14-13, and the Cougars never gave up the lead from that point.

Forward Michael Smith sparked BYU with 16 first half points as the Cougars built a 54-38 halftime lead. Smith finished with a game-high 26 points, and was three for three from outside the three-point perimeter.

Other Cougars in double figures were Capener and Tom Gneiting, each with 13 points and Brian Taylor with 10. Haws finished with eight points.

The only bright spot for the Falcons was the play of guard Raymond Dudley, who scored 19 points and was five for eight from the three-point range. Despite a balanced performance from the rest of the squad (five players in double figures), Air Force did not match up well against BYU.

Because very tall people aren't allowed to be pilots for the Air Force, BYU enjoyed a height advantage over the shorter cadets and came away with 50 rebounds compared to 27 for the Falcons.

The second half was a sleeper as the Cougars ran away from Air Force, building as much as a 22-point lead as some fans left the game earlier than usual.

But those who stayed saw what may be the beginning of a new era at BYU — the Marty Haws Dunkfest years.

Jordan, Wilkins, Bird head All-Stars on Eastern Conference's best team

NEW YORK (AP) — The dazzle of Chicago's Michael Jordan and Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins will be on display in February's All-Star game.

Wilkins, who will start at forward with Boston's Larry Bird, totaled 1,029,131 votes to Bird's 902,701.

Jordan, the NBA's leading scorer, received a record number of voters in winning his starting guard position.

Chosen to join Jordan, Bird and Wilkins in the starting lineup for the Eastern Conference were guard Julius Erving of Philadelphia and center Moses Malone of Washington.

The West team consists of Magic Johnson and James Worthy of the Lakers, Ralph Samson and Akeem Olajuwon of Houston, and Alvin Robertson of San Antonio.

Quarterbacks better beware in Super Bowl XXI shootout

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Lawrence Taylor worries about John Elway's legs, how hard the Denver quarterback is to bring down.

Rulon Jones worries about Phil Simms' eyes, how even under the fiercest of rushes the Giants quarterback keeps his eyes downfield, looking to find a receiver just before he is hit.

Sunday's Super Bowl could turn on whether Taylor or Jones does a better job.

If the Denver Broncos and New York Giants play different sorts of defenses, there is one remarkable similarity: the Giants key their pass rush to the stunts of the linebacker-defensive end duo of Taylor and Leonard Marshall; the Broncos use the tandem of Karl Mecklenburg and Jones. All four are going to the Pro Bowl. Each team uses its duo to free-lance outside the normal set of the defense.

"What we have to do is stop the running game and make them go to the pass," said Marshall in a comment seconded by the others.

"If they go to the pass, then we have to bust the quarterback, bust the bubble and not let them have the momentum to carry them on."

The Giants defense has busted a lot of bubbles this year. They established a reputation akin to last year's Chicago Bears by knocking out quarterbacks — Ron Jaworski of Philadelphia, Danny White of Dallas and Tommy Kramer of Philadelphia in three straight games, then San Francisco's Joe Montana in their first playoff game. Jay Schroeder of the Redskins barely survived the NFC championship game and was dazed when the game ended. Taylor led the NFL with 20 1/2 sacks.

But the mobile Elway worries the Giants. He was sacked just twice in New York's 19-16 win Nov. 23, once by nose tackle Jim Burt for a nine-yard loss and once on a scramble by defensive back Greg Lasker. And he scrambled eight times for 51 yards, — the majority of the 80 yards the Broncos got on the ground that day.

"I didn't have that much trouble getting to him," Taylor remembers. "... But I couldn't bring him down and he got away."

The Giants will probably use the same defensive scheme Sunday that they used in that game — trying to keep Elway in the pocket instead of flushing him out.

Super Bowl players won't go broke

By DAVID BUXTON
Sports Editor

Someone came by my desk yesterday and asked what I thought of this Sunday's Super Bowl game.

Super Bowl? Is that this weekend? It's amazing how these world-shaping events just seem to creep up before you have time to really analyze their potential international impact they may have.

Personally, I think the players on the Giants and Broncos should ask for more benefits as a result of their settling this worldwide clash.

Super Bowl officials are only going to offer each member of the winning team $38,000, and the losers get a humiliating $18,000.

I don't know how long hardworking football players will put up with their measly salaries. Even the best-paid gridiron stars earn just over $1 million a year despite playing possibly more than 16 games in just one season. Obviously they don't get paid enough, because many of them turn to sponsoring businesses to supplement their income.

Thank goodness for Honda, which surely must have saved Jim McMahon from destitution last year.

Business' sympathy for the players must be the reason why they are allowed to advertise so cheaply during the game. A 30-second spot on Super Bowl XXI will cost a sponsor just $650,000 this year.

I'm a humble kind of guy. Why doesn't someone offer me $18,000 for a story on the game?

Parents have say in kids' behavior

By PAM OLSEN
Universe Staff Writer

By identifying the different types of parenting styles that exist, parents can decide which style they want to use with their children, said a Washington State University lecturer Thursday night.

Randy Day, who received his doctorate in family science at BYU, listed several types of parenting styles in his speech, "Family Rules: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly," in the ELWC Ballroom.

Types of parents differ in how they believe rules should be used in raising children, he said. It is crucial for parents to ask themselves what they think their role should be as a parent.

Society has "a myriad of...rules that govern every aspect of our lives," said Day, and people need to understand how they as parents "react to (their families with regard to various rules."

These rules include both the unspoken, covert rules and the formal rules, he said. They provide the necessary structure within the family.

"Rules are the punctuation in the sentences of life. They give order to the various aspects of life," said Day.

The different types of parents run the gamut from those who regulate, or loosely guide their children to those who rule, or impose their will on theirs, he said.

Day first identified the "sculptor parent," who believes that the parents take full responsibility for the child while it grows. They develop and construct the child, deciding for the child what is best. And if the child "turns out rotten," it is the parents' fault.

Day's next parenting type was the "gardener parent," who believes in the "innate goodness" of the child. These parents feel that their job is to help maximize the children's abilities, but not to mold them absolutely.

He also talked about the "maestro parent," who is a democratic leader, making sure that the children are playing to the beat, but not telling them which instrument to play. The group helps with decisions, but "the parent has the final say."

The "coach parent," according to Day, gives hope and encouragement, but doesn't play the game for the children. His rules reflect the desire to succeed.

Last on Day's list was the "Johnny Appleseed parent," who generally leaves the children to their own devices, letting them make all their own decisions. His rules are very loose and unstructured.

Day said that it is important that both parents use the same parenting style.

Chamber installs members for '87

By KRISTIN BECKSTEAD
Universe Staff Writer

Lt. Governor Val Oveson installed the new Provo/Orem Chamber of Commerce Wednesday night during the Second Annual Membership Banquet at the Excelsior Hotel.

Lewis Billings, from the DENWA Corp. and past chairman of the Chamber's Board of Directors Executive Committee, presented awards and special recognition for service to many of this year's retiring board members.

"My last motion as chairman of the chamber is to express a warm appreciation for the staff," said Billings. "The Chamber of Commerce is people, and without people there wouldn't be a Chamber of Commerce."

KUTV news anchor Michelle King emceed the event.

"The main reason we are here is to honor the chamber members," said David Voegel, the new chairman of the chamber.

BYU President Jeffrey Holland was the keynote speaker for the evening.

"Congratulations on a wonderful year, and especially the merging of the chambers," said Holland.

Holland spoke about moral degradation in today's society.

"The mix of religion in our community is good," said Holland. "In that environment we are most likely to succeed economically and socially."

The evening concluded with a show by BYU's Young Ambassadors.

Crisis Line seeks help

Suicide calls increase

By MARTA NEILSON
Universe Staff Writer

Crisis Line received 21 suicide calls the first week of January, compared to the average 8-10 per month, and sponsored a session for volunteers Jan. 20 to train them in dealing with these and other crises situations.

Suicide calls generally increase as each BYU semester begins, according to Crisis line President Jeff Johnson, a BYU zoology major.

The anonymous listening service is available to Utah County residents in all types of crisis situations. Crisis Line also refers callers to agencies if food, legal, financial or counseling services are needed.

Crisis Line operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, according to Johnson.

Fred, a BYU psychology major, volunteer, and president-elect of Crisis

Line says, "We don't solve people's problems for them. We're not professionals, but we do have the skills to listen."

Deborah, a BYU nursing major, volunteered because she wanted to learn communication skills. She said she felt Crisis Line could give her the experience she needed to talk to people.

Crisis Line receives 500 to 1200 calls a month. Seventy percent of Crisis Line volunteers are BYU students who listen to callers once a week for three hours. The volunteers commit to the program for eight months to one year.

A training session will be taught beginning Jan. 26 from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at BYU's Comprehensive Clinic in the John Taylor Building.

Because the two students quoted above wish to remain anonymous, their surnames have been deleted.

Student property can be searched

Students in the Alpine School District may have their personal properties, lockers and cars searched as a result of a newly passed disciplinary procedure.

The district's Board of Education approved the "Search and Seizure" policy in a recent board meeting to "protect the health and safety of all students," according to Public Information Officer Michael Robinson.

"This makes it possible for administrators to deal with emergency situations and maintain an efficient learning environment," Robinson said. He also said an emergency could be defined as the concealment of weapons, alcohol or illegal drugs.

"When school authorities have reasonable cause to believe that items are concealed in a school locker," the policy states, "they shall inspect a locker, but only with the affected student present."

Richard Gappmayer, vice president of the Board of Education indicated there have been several bomb threats, and an actual bomb had been found last month at Lakeridge Junior High School in Orem.

"We felt like our students needed to be protected from this type of thing," he said.

Residents stay away from windows

Sniper still prowls R.I. towns

NORTH SMITHFIELD, R.I. (AP) — Five-thirty. The day is dying, dusk falling softly over the Blackstone Valley's cozy homes and wooded hills.

The National Guard moves in.

A dozen soldiers stuff their flak jackets with candy bars; pull on their helmets and troop from the smoky warmth of the barracks to waiting jeeps that trundle up the highway.

A military helicopter buzzes overhead. Local police and state troopers prowls the streets, randomly stopping people, asking them where they're going and what they're doing.

On the lonely backroads, the soldiers take up their posts. Hidden by the darkness, they watch and wait.

Somewhere in the night, a sniper does the same.

Using a .22-caliber semi-automatic weapon, the gunman usually takes aim through lighted picture windows as his victims relax in their living rooms.

Eleven attacks in a month have left four people wounded, two of them seriously.

Investigators have no description of the sniper and say there is no pattern to the attacks — seven in this northern Rhode Island town of 11,000, two in neighboring Cumberland and two just across the border in Bellingham, Mass.

Nerves are taut.

"Every time a dog barks, your ears perk up," said Sharon Farbsten, a 46-year-old dental receptionist who lives on an isolated road in North Smithfield.

In house after house off the valley's winding roads, curtains are drawn at sunset. Porch lights are doused.

Television sets are moved to back rooms. A car backfires and the special sniper hotline police have set up rings with another false report of gunfire.

Adapted Aquatics volunteers help handicapped students feel success through swimming program.

Swimmers given aid

By COLLEEN AMES
Universe Staff Writer

Some people don't believe anyone can look good in a BYU issue swimsuit. However, volunteers for the Adapted Aquatics program are happy to wear them.

"If that's what we have to wear, then it's okay," says Dayna Stone, a freshman from North Ogden majoring in elementary education.

"You don't have to wear BYU issue swimsuits, you get to wear them," says Jim Murphy, executive director of Utah Special Olympics.

Adapted Aquatics is sponsored by the Utah Special Olympics and the American National Red Cross. The swimming program is for persons with physical or mental impairments. About 200 handicapped students from schools in the area come to BYU twice a week for swimming.

Some of the program's objectives are to teach the impaired to swim better, to give them the opportunity to experience success and have fun, to increase attention spans, to increase muscle skills and to develop acceptable social behaviors.

The responsibility of doing this falls on the volunteers. "You're role models," Murphy told volunteers at an orientation meeting. "Think about everything that you say and do. If one of you spits water and you're just playing around, we could end up with 200 kids doing that."

The program's goal is to have a volunteer for every student. "We still need volunteers," said Murphy. "We need people who are committed. On Thursdays, we especially need volunteers when we have about 120 kids here."

Stone joined Adapted Aquatics last semester. After participating in an 8-hour training session, she certified as a coach. Coaches help train the volunteers.

Two new volunteers for the program are freshmen roommates, Cindy Jensen, a nursing major from Spokane, Wash. and Maria Thompson, an open major from Cincinnati.

Both Jensen and Thompson have members of their families that are handicapped. "I really like seeing them happy. They can all do this and I like to see them happy," said Jensen.

"I work with the water adjustment group. They've never been in the water before. Some of them are afraid and it's fun to watch their progress. I love it," said Stone.

While Utah's mountains are great for snowmobiles and ATVs, the Forest Service wants riders to follow safety guidelines for better enjoyment.

ATV safety emphasized

By LINDA RITTENHOUSE
Universe Staff Writer

Snowmobilers and all terrain vehicle (ATV) users flock to the mountains — America's winter playground. Unfortunately, many neglect to observe basic safety precautions, resulting in unnecessary accidents and injuries.

The Forest Service and organized off-road vehicle (ORV) associations want people to enjoy the pleasure of winter recreation, but, "They should also be aware of the hazards, and with winter travel [they] really have to use [their] common sense," says Steve Winslow, district camping and recreation officer of the Uinta National Forest Service.

"A lot of people go up to Tibble Fork with their snowmobiles, especially on the weekends. Sometimes it gets icy from overuse," says Ranger Mike Cook. "But the point where the Alpine Loop road is closed for the winter, on the south fork above Mutual Dell (in American Fork Canyon), is actually a better jump off point. That area is closed to sledding and tubing, and I guess a lot of people don't realize it's there. When people go up there on weekdays, a lot of the time they have the whole mountain to themselves."

There are 26 miles of trails in the Provo/Heber/American Fork area. "These are the most beautiful trails in the state," says Don Arndorfer, president of the Utah ATV Association.

"This is 'the' place to come in the winter. The trails are great; the snow is really super, and the scenery is beautiful."

When asked what kind of safety advice he would give, Arndorfer said: "There is no price you can pay for safety. It only makes sense to take some precautions. Always wear a helmet. It's not a question of if, but when you will go over. All of us (referring to members of the ATV Assoc.) have had at least one good crash. And stay on the trails; that's where you'll get the best ride, and you'll be less likely to get stuck."

Safety hints recommended by the Forest Service for winter travelers are as follows:

- Notify someone of your planned route and your estimated return time.
- Know your snowmobile or ATV and keep it well maintained.
- Never cross ice.
- Travel with a minimum of 3 people and 2 machines.
- Carry emergency supplies such as snow shoes, first aid kit, map, extra fuel, flares, and rations.
- Check the weather forecast before all trips to avoid dangerous weather conditions. Go back if the weather turns bad.
- Look for trail markers and follow them. They will keep you on safe and interesting trails.
- "You should always check with the Avalanche Service before going out," advises Cook. The number in this area is 374-9770. "Also, please observe wildlife from a distance. Any harassment of the animals stresses them when they are trying hard to survive the winter. Never use your vehicle to chase the animals."

Maps of the snowmobile/ATV trails are available through the Uinta National Forest Service.

Memorial set for ski victim; services Sat.

A memorial service is scheduled for Justin Jensen, who was a member of BYU's 79th Ward, on Saturday, Jan. 24 at 11 a.m. It will take place in 257 TNRB.

Jensen was killed Monday in a skiing accident at Park West Ski Area after he apparently lost control and struck a tree.

Jensen, 21, was from Clovis, California.

Letter to the Student Body

Brigham Young University sponsored by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has a deep commitment to fostering the spiritual development of its students. Since its inception, instruction of the intellect has been coupled with programs to facilitate spiritual maturation. To that end, the Church has adopted a new procedure whereby all students will have the opportunity for an annual interview with an ecclesiastical leader to ensure continuing understanding of and commitment to the University's Code of Honor as well as Dress and Grooming standards.

Beginning January 21, 1987, forms will be available to students at campus information desks located in the Administration Building and the Wilkinson Center; the office of University Standards, 350 SWKT; the Student Life Office, 380 SWKT; all College Advisement Centers and all campus Housing offices. These forms should be taken by the student to the bishop of the ward they are attending while at BYU for a continuing endorsement interview for Fall semester of 1987. Non-members may have the interview with a minister of their faith or they may arrange for an interview through the Student Life Office.

Students should arrange to take the form to their bishop and have the interview before April 5, 1987. Bishops and ministers of other faiths conducting continuing endorsement interviews will be asked to send the completed form to the Student Life Office, 380 SWKT by April 6, 1987.

Those students who do not receive a continuing ecclesiastical endorsement from their bishop or other ecclesiastical leader will not be eligible to register for Fall semester 1987 or any semester thereafter until they receive an ecclesiastical endorsement to return.

This program is designed to help us more fully recognize the spiritual purposes of Brigham Young University by providing for an annual review of and recommitment to the standards of worthiness which the Church and our Board of Trustees have established. With your cooperation, this process will go smoothly and will result in positive outcomes for you and the University.

Regards,

Maren M. Mouritsen
Assistant Executive Vice President and Dean of Student Life

CONTINUING ECCELSIASTICAL ENDORSEMENT

(Student responsibilities under the program:)

1. All students should obtain a Continuing Endorsement Form from any of the following locations: campus information desks located in the Administration Building and the Wilkinson Center; the office of University Standards, 350 SWKT; the Student Life Office, 380 SWKT; all College Advisement Centers; and On-Campus Housing offices. The form will be available beginning January 21 1987.
2. Students should read the form and provide the requested information, including the student's written understanding of and commitment to the standards of worthiness for attendance at Brigham Young University.
3. Before April 5, 1987, students should take the completed form to the bishop of the ward which they have been attending while at BYU for a continuing endorsement interview. Non-members of the LDS Church may have an interview with a local ecclesiastical leader of their faith or may contact the Office of Student Life, (380 SWKT, 378-4771) to arrange for an interview.
4. All interviews should be completed on or before April 5, 1987. Bishops and other ecclesiastical leaders will be asked to send the forms to the Office of Student Life (380 SWKT, 378-4771) by April 6, 1987.
5. Students who do not receive continuing ecclesiastical endorsement will not be allowed to register for Fall semester 1987 or any semester or term thereafter until they receive an ecclesiastical endorsement.
